

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Christina Falceto is a recent MA Philosophy graduate from The New School for Social Research. Her research focuses on the intersection between philosophy of mind, feminist theory, and phenomenology. Specifically, she looks at how phenomenological experiences of qualia disrupt reductive theories of mind in order to challenge problematic constructions of human nature.

Kathryn Gruszecki is an MA student in Philosophy at The New School for Social Research. Her current research interest is on the topic of violence, looking specifically at Hegel and Sophocles' Antigone. Previously, she received an MA in Ethics, Peace, and Global Affairs from American University and is also one of this year's co-facilitators of People in Support of Women in Philosophy (PSWIP).

Abigail K. Iturra is finishing her first year as an MA student at The New School for Social Research. She obtained her Bachelors in the majors of philosophy and physics at the University of California, Berkeley. Her research interests include 19th and 20th century continental philosophy, Latin American philosophy, animal ethics, aesthetics, and critical theory.

Alyssa Thompson is a second year MA student at The New School for Social Research, where she is facilitator of the Graduate Faculty Student Senate and secretary of the Philosophy Forum. Her research explores the boundaries of subjectivity, particularly in bridging the gap between the individual and the collective subject. Her influences include but are not limited to Spinoza, Foucault, and Patanjali.
