

About the Contributors

CHRISTOPHER M. AANSTOOS received his Ph.D. from Duquesne University. After having previously taught at the Pennsylvania State University at McKeesport, he is currently an assistant professor of psychology on the graduate faculty at West Georgia College. His research interests and publications are in the areas of cognition (especially thinking), and the historical, theoretical, and methodological foundations of psychology. Currently he is preparing a book contrasting the phenomenological and cognitivist approaches to thought.

Address: Psychology Department, West Georgia College, Carrollton, Georgia 30118.

ANTHONY BARTON received his B.A. from Ohio Wesleyan University in 1955 and his Ph.D. in psychology from the University of Chicago in 1964. He had pre-doctoral and post-doctoral internships at the University of Chicago Counseling Center and V.A. Hospitals in Pittsburgh, respectively. He has taught at Duquesne University in the psychology department since 1960, studied for several years at the Gestalt Institute of Cleveland, and has written a book, Three Worlds of Therapy. He is currently completing a text on Foundations of Psychotherapy. His specialties are individual, group, and family therapy. He teaches and supervises primarily in these areas and has a private practice as well.

Address: Psychology Department, Duquesne University, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15282

ROBERT FESSLER received his Ph.D. from Duquesne University in 1978. He has worked as a psychotherapist at Dixmont State Hospital and in private practice. Since 1969, he has been on the faculty of Point Park College, Pittsburgh, and is currently an associate professor and director of the College Counseling Center. His main area of interest is phenomenological research on the structure of the psychotherapeutic relationship.

Address: Psychology Department, Point Park College, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15222

AMEDEO P. GIORGI received his Ph.D. from Fordham University. He is currently professor of psychology at Duquesne University and a founder and editor of the Journal of Phenomenological Psychology. He is author of Psychology As A Human Science.

Address: Psychology Department, Duquesne University, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15282

CAROLYN GRATTON received her B.A. and M.L.S. from the University of Toronto and her M.A. and Ph.D. in psychology from Duquesne University. For two years she worked as a clinical psychologist at Somerset State Hospital and is currently an associate professor at the Institute of Formative Spirituality at Duquesne University. As research editor for Studies in Formative Spirituality, her main interest continues to lie in the development of the integrative Science of Foundational Life Formation founded by Adrian van Kaam. She has written two books, Guidelines for Spiritual Direction (Dimension, 1980), and Trusting: A Way for Human Hearts (Crossroad, 1982), as well as several articles related to this project. He is presently working on a transcultural method for spiritually formative teaching that features guided reflection on personal experience and visual aids for adult learning.

Address: Institute of Formative Spirituality, Duquesne University, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15282.

STEEN HALLING received his B.A. from York University, Toronto, Canada, and his Ph.D. from Duquesne University in 1976. He currently chairs the Department of Psychology, Seattle University where he helped to establish a graduate program in existential-phenomenological psychology. Before coming to Seattle University, he worked as a therapist in several psychiatric settings in Canada and the United States, and taught for four years at Seton Hill College, Greensburg, Pennsylvania. His interests include existential approaches to therapy, interpersonal relations and psychology and literature.

Address: Department of Psychology, Seattle University, Seattle, Washington 98122

BERND JAGER studied at the University of Groningen (The Netherlands), San Francisco State College and received his Ph.D. in psychology from Duquesne University. He is currently in the Psychology Department at Sonoma State College. He is also translation editor for the journal, Humanities.

Address: Psychology Department, Sonoma State College, Rohnert Park, California 94928

DREYER KRUGER holds a doctorate in psychology from the University of South Africa. He has worked as a social worker, vocational psychologist, personnel consultant and clinical psychologist. In 1966 he became professor of psychology at the University of Fort Hare and in 1974 transferred to Rhodes University where he is currently professor and head of the Psychology Department and also practices part-time as a psychotherapist. He was a Resident Scholar at Duquesne University during the 1980-81 academic year. He has published extensively and is the author of, inter alia, An Introduction to Phenomenological Psychology, published by Duquesne University Press.

Address: Psychology Department, Rhodes University, Grahamstown 6140 South Africa

JACK TAK-FOK LING is currently an assistant professor in psychology and counseling at Boston University and a member of the Psychology Division in the evening program at Clark University. He received his B.A. in 1968 and his

M.A. in 1972, both from Indiana University. His Ph.D. was received in 1979 at Duquesne University. His area of concentration is motivation and productivity and his interests include the study of problems with immigrant Chinese families.

Address: Division of Psychology and Counseling, Boston University College of Basic Studies, 871 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston, Massachusetts 02215

JOSEPH LYONS is a professor of psychology at the University of California, Davis. Prior to that he taught at Kansas, Indiana, Cincinnati, and Kentucky. He was for ten years associated with Erwin Straus in research on the phenomenology of expression at Lexington, Kentucky. He was a Visiting Professor at Duquesne University, summer, 1976.

Address: Psychology Department, University of California, Davis, Davis, California 95616

CHARLES MAES studied at Denver University (B.A.) and at Tulane University (M.S.W.), completing Ph.D. training in psychology at Duquesne University. Before to Duquesne, he worked in the community mental health area in Chicago, with the Bureau of Corrections in Wisconsin and in community organization agencies in Denver, Colorado. For a number of years he has held the position of director of counseling services at the Center for Training and Research in Phenomenological Psychology, a training facility of the Psychology Department at Duquesne. An associate professor, he teaches half-time in the Department of Psychology and half-time in the Institute of Formative Spirituality.

Address: Psychology Department, Duquesne University, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15282

ROBERT J. MASEK completed his B.A. in 1967 in psychology at the University of Oregon, his M.A. in 1970 and Ph.D. in 1981 in clinical psychology respectively at Duquesne University and the University of Regina (Canada). He completed his clinical internship and served as a staff member during 1967-1970 at Woodville State Hospital, Carnegie, Pennsylvania. After joining the Psychology Department at West Georgia College in 1970, he took leave to complete his doctoral studies in 1972, and served on the faculty of the University of Regina—with a joint appointment as a special lecturer in psychology and clinical and didactic supervisor in University Counseling Services. After returning to West Georgia in 1976, he is presently an associate professor of psychology with interests in a phenomenologically grounded clinical psychology, and in the history, theory and practice of depth psychology. He is presently working on a phenomenological clarification of Heinz Kohut's Self-psychology.

Address: Psychology Department, West Georgia College, Carrollton, Georgia 30118

CHRISTOPHER J. MRUK received his B.S. from Michigan State University in 1971, and the Ph.D. in psychology from Duquesne in 1981. Currently, he is the director of counseling at St. Francis College in Loretto, Pennsylvania. Previously, he was a staff psychologist for the Mon Valley Mental Health Center in Monessen, Pennsylvania, taught psychology part-time at Duquesne, consulted for the Vocational Rehabilitation Center of Pittsburgh, and was an adjunct instructor in the Department of Psychiatry at Michigan State. His major professional concern is the psychology of self-esteem. He is also interested in assessment psychology, time limited psychotherapy and the integration of natural and human science methods in psychology.

Address: Counseling Center, St. Francis College, Loretto, Pennsylvania 15940.

EDWARD L. MURRAY, Ph.D., is an associate professor in the Department of Psychology at Duquesne University. He has been a member of the faculty since 1963. From 1970-1975, he served as chairman of the Department of Psychology. From 1975-1981, he was vice-president for academic affairs as well as acting president of Duquesne University for the Academic Year 1976-1977. On sabbatical during the past year, he completed a book: Imaginative Thinking, Language and Personal Integration.

Address: Psychology Department, Duquesne University, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15282

DAVID L. SMITH earned a licentiate in theology from the University of Fribourg, Switzerland in 1959, an M.A. in existential-phenomenological psychology from Duquesne University in 1961, and a Ph.D. in clinical psychology from the University of Montreal in 1968. He has worked at Somerset State Hospital and served as chairman of the Behavioral Sciences Department of Point Park College. He has served as chairman of the Department of Psychology at Duquesne University since 1976 and is an associate professor. His specialization involves phenomenological reflection upon psychoanalytic theory. He is also involved in psychotherapy as practitioner and supervisor.

Address: Psychology Department, Duquesne University, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15282

ROLF VON ECKARTSBERG received his Ph.D. from Harvard University's Department of Social Relations in 1964 under Professor Gordon Allport. While at Harvard he worked with professors Frankl and Boss which led to his interest in existential phenomenology. Since 1964 he has been on the faculty of Duquesne University. His current interests are human ecology and its implications for social psychology from an experiential point of view.

Address: Psychology Department, Duquesne University, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15282

FREDERICK J. WERTZ received his undergraduate degree from Beloit College and M.A. and his Ph.D. (1981) from Duquesne University. He worked in the Counseling Center and taught psychology at Carnegie-Mellon University. In 1976 he was the associate project director for the research grant "Being Criminally Victimized", funded by the NEH. He is currently teaching at Hunter College of the City of New York and at Iona College. Central among his interests are the foundations of psychological science and phenomenological research methods in psychology.

Address: 1105 First Avenue, Apt. 2, New York City, New York 10021