

SPECIAL ISSUE: THE POSSIBILITY OF “TOKYO SCHOOL” PHILOSOPHY

The city of Tokyo is home to a number of prominent academic centers of both historical and contemporary significance, including the University of Tokyo founded in 1877. However, unlike the University of Kyoto and the “Kyoto School,” the diverse network of scholars based in Tokyo never coalesced around a “Tokyo School” with a shared philosophical identity. This special issue invites critical engagement with the lineage of Tokyo-based philosophers. The editorial team would like to thank our guest editors Nakajima Takahiro and Maki Sato.
