SELECTED ARTICLES ON LOCKE:
A COMPUTERIZED BIBLIOGRAPHY

Compiled by Vere Chappell

Abstract

This is a list of journal articles and chapters of books on Locke's philosophy, published in the last fifty years or so. The subjects covered are those treated by Locke in the Essay concerning Human Understanding, i.e. metaphysics, theory of knowledge, philosophy of language, philosophy of science, and ethics. The bibliography was produced with the help of a computer, using the INFOL-2 program and RNF text processor. There are 202 distinct items. These are first listed chronologically, then alphabetically; then eight lists of items on special topics, selected from the master list, are given. The special topics are Innate Ideas, Primary and Secondary Qualities, Substance, Personal Identity, Language, Essence, Knowledge, and Locke and Leibniz.
Selected Articles on Locke: A Computerized Bibliography

The following bibliography is restricted to journal articles and chapters of books published in the last fifty years or so. The book chapters listed are from monographs as well as collections, except that no chapters of monographs primarily devoted to Locke's philosophy are included. The subjects covered are those treated by Locke in the Essay concerning Human Understanding, i.e. theory of knowledge, metaphysics, philosophy of language, philosophy of science, and ethics. Most of the items listed are philosophical or critical or interpretive in nature, but a few historical pieces have been included as well.

The bibliography was assembled and produced with the help of a computer, specifically the University of Massachusetts' CDC Cyber 175, with Network Operating System 1.4 518/519. Data was entered, edited, and organized via remote terminal, using INPOL-2, an information storage and retrieval language developed by programmers at CDC, Northwestern University, the Centre Interfacultaire de Calcule Electronique de l'Universite de Geneve, and the University of Massachusetts. Final text was produced by means of RNF, a Cyber text-formatting program developed at the University of Illinois, and printed on a Diablo 1620 terminal.

With the INPOL-2 system, once data has been entered and "established," it can be retrieved, either in toto or selectively, in a variety of ways. The present bibliography contains 202 distinct items. In the first two lists that follow, all 202 items are given, first chronologically (by date of first publication) and then alphabetically (by author's surname). Succeeding lists contain selected items devoted to various special topics. No completeness claims are made for these latter lists; there is no guarantee that all master-list items on a given subject, even those dealing with it exclusively, will appear on the special list for that subject. The bibliographer has not read every item on the master list, and the selections were made chiefly (though not entirely) by means of key words included in titles. Most titles of philosophical articles contain words that provide some clue to the article's subject matter; but there are probably not many scholars, let alone computers, who could tell from the title what, e.g., "Mr. Locke's Darling Notion" is about.

Most of the items listed are included in Roland Hall's and Roger Woolhouse's "Forty Years of Work on John Locke (1929-1969)" (Philosophical Quarterly 20 [1970], with "Addenda" and "Supplement" ibid. and in Locke Newsletter, 1 ff. [1970 ff.]), or in the "Recent Publications" section of Locke Newsletter, edited by Hall. These works have been and will remain (along with Christophersen's Introduction) the major bibliographical resources for Locke scholars. My own list, indeed, was largely drawn from those of Hall and Woolhouse and Hall solo. My purpose was not to produce an alternative to their work but to help make it more accessible.

This bibliography is a by-product of the compiler's first efforts to learn how to use the computer—something, I am convinced, that no scholar from now on can afford not to do. I owe a debt to my mentors, Ruth Berggren and Joe Donohue; it is a pleasure to acknowledge it here.
