About the Authors

Robert Abelman is Distinguished Professor in the School of Communication at Cleveland State University. He has published extensively in the area of religious broadcasting, including the edited volume Religious Television: Controversies and Conclusions and an entry in the Encyclopedia of Communication and Information. His work on mission and vision statements has examined historically black, tribal, religious, community, and for-profit colleges and universities, and will be included in the forthcoming Handbook of Research on Institutional Language. This work has been partially funded by a grant from the National Academic Advising Association (NACADA).

Joseph Almeida is professor of classics and legal studies and director of the Great Books of Western Civilization Honors Program at Franciscan University of Steubenville. He is a graduate of Thomas Aquinas College (B.A.), Villanova University (M.A., classics), Villanova University Law School (J.D.), Middlebury College (M.A., English literature), and the University of California, Santa Barbara (Ph.D., classics). Author of Justice as an Aspect of the Polis Idea in Solon’s Political Poems (Brill, 2003), he is also a practicing attorney focusing on criminal appeals to the United States Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals and tax collection issues.

Ryan J. Barilleaux is Paul Rejai Professor of Political Science, Miami University, Oxford, Ohio. He is the author or editor of ten books and has published dozens of scholarly articles as well. His latest book is Tough Times for the President. He was the Miami University Effective Educator for 2010–2011 and is a former editor of the Catholic Social Science Review. He received a B.A., summa cum laude, from the University of Louisiana at Lafayette (1979), and an M.A. (1980) and Ph.D. (1983) from the University of Texas at Austin.

Alfred R. D’Anca is associate professor and chair of the Sociology Department at the College of Mount Saint Vincent, Riverdale, N.Y., where he teaches courses in the fields of sociology, and crime and justice. He received his doctoral degree in Sociology from Fordham University, Bronx, N.Y., and had a career of service in the United States Probation System that included significant interaction with the federal judiciary. His areas of interest include the social dimensions of law, the relationship of crime to racial/ethnic diversity and the social environment, and the relationship of Catholic social principles to criminological theory and the system of doing justice.

Gary D. Glenn is distinguished teaching professor emeritus of political science at Northern Illinois University, where he has taught since 1966. He is a student of the history of political philosophy, American political thought, and of the relation of religion to both. He has paid particular attention throughout his career to Xenophon, Hobbes, Locke, and the American founding. In recent years, his scholarship has focused primarily on the relation of Catholicism to American democracy.

Kenneth L. Grasso is professor of political science at Texas State University-San Marcos. He has written widely on Catholic social thought and has edited several books including Catholicism and Religious Freedom: Contemporary Reflections on Vatican II's Declaration on Religious Liberty (Sheed & Ward, 2006); Rethinking Rights: Historical, Political, and Philosophical Perspectives (University of Missouri Press, 2009); and Theology and Public Philosophy: Four Conversations (Lexington, 2012).

Ernest A. Greco is associate professor in the Department of Politics and International Relations at Roger Williams University in Bristol, Rhode Island, where he has taught since 1995. He received his Ph.D. in political science from Boston University in 1987. His current research is focused on Christian Democratic parties in Latin America and Europe.

John Hart is assistant director of research at Sherman College of Chiropractic in Spartanburg, South Carolina. A previous paper of his, “A Second Opinion on the Health Care Crisis,” was published in Fidelity magazine in 1994.

Carson Holloway is associate professor of political science at the University of Nebraska at Omaha, where he has taught since 2002. He teaches courses in political philosophy, constitutional law, and American national government. He is the author of The Way of Life: John Paul II and the Challenge of Liberal Modernity (Baylor University Press, 2008).

Eileen P. Kelly is professor of management in the school of business at Ithaca College. She received her doctoral and master’s degrees from the University of Cincinnati and her bachelor of science from Franciscan University of Steubenville. She previously taught at Louisiana State University in Shreveport and at Creighton University. She has published extensively in the areas of religious expression in the workplace, business ethics, and employment rights. She is on the editorial boards of the Journal of Applied Management and Entrepreneurship, Industrial Manage-Thomas E. Kelly is associate professor of accounting and business administration at Franciscan University of Steubenville. He received his master’s and bachelor of science degrees from Franciscan University and his doctorate from Robert Morris University. He previously taught at West Liberty University and Bethany College in West Virginia. He has been the faculty advisor of Students in Free Enterprise (SIFE) at Franciscan University since 2004. Throughout his affiliation with SIFE, along with his doctoral dissertation, his academic work and research has been directed towards combining the philosophies of the free market system and Roman Catholicism.

Stephen M. Krason is professor of political science and legal studies at Franciscan University of Steubenville and co-founder and president of the Society of Catholic Social Scientists.

Peter Augustine Lawler is Dana Professor of Government at Berry College and executive editor of the acclaimed scholarly quarterly Perspectives on Political Science. He served on President Bush’s Council on Bioethics and was the 2007 recipient of the Weaver Prize in Scholarly Letters. Author or editor of fifteen books and over 200 articles and chapters in a wide variety of venues, his most recent book is Modern and American Dignity.

Guillermo Montes, Ph.D., is associate professor of executive leadership at St. John Fisher College in Rochester, N.Y. He has published in health economics, particularly on the impact that having a child with autism spectrum disorders has on various aspects of the family.

Omar Nagi is associate professor of sociology at the College of Mount Saint Vincent. He received an undergraduate degree in economics from the American University in Cairo, and a Ph.D. in sociology from the University at Albany. His areas of concentration are economic sociology, globalization and social development, gender, and methodology. He has previously conducted research on class structure in the Middle East, and is currently examining the role of social media. He currently directs the Center for Undergraduate Research at the College of Mount Saint Vincent.

Edward J. O’Boyle, Ph.D., is senior research associate affiliated with Mayo Research Institute. He specializes in personalist economics that centers on the economic agent in which he replaces the individual and individualism of mainstream economics, which are rooted in the Enlightenment and the script stage of human communication, with the person and personalism, which spring from the electronic stage of human communi-
About the Authors

Jeff Rankin is assistant professor of marketing at Franciscan University of Steubenville, teaching undergraduate and graduate courses in marketing and management. He received his B.S. in mechanical engineering and his M.B.A. from the University of Pittsburgh and, prior to joining the faculty at Franciscan, held senior engineering and executive level marketing positions in the engineering software industry. In addition to teaching at Franciscan, he is the student advisor and financial secretary for the university’s student chapter of the Knights of Columbus and is board president at AIM Women’s Center, a pro-life pregnancy resource center in Steubenville.

Ronald J. Rychlak is MDLA Professor of Law at the University of Mississippi School of Law. He is a graduate of Wabash College and Vanderbilt University School of Law. He is also the author or co-author of seven books. The Catholic League called Hitler, the War, and the Pope, “the definitive popular history of the papacy of Pope Pius XII in the shadow of Nazism.” Fr. Peter Gumpel, the Vatican’s judge in Pius XII’s sainthood cause, called Righteous Gentile “the most accurate account to appear in the English language.” Professor Rychlak was featured in all twelve episodes of EWTN’s series Pope Pius XII.

Richard Rymarz is professor and Peter and Doris Kule Chair in Catholic Religious Education St Joseph’s College, University of Alberta, and adjunct professor at Australian Catholic University. He has published widely in education, theology, and the sociology of religion. He has a special interest in the role of Catholic educational institutions in secular cultures. His most recent book explores some of the implications of the New Evangelization for Catholic schools.
Brian Simboli did his undergraduate work at Swarthmore and has a Ph.D. in philosophy from the University of Notre Dame and an M.A. in economics from Lehigh University.

Joseph A. Varacalli is S.U.N.Y. Distinguished Service Professor and director of the Center for Catholic Studies at Nassau Community College. He is the author of The Catholic Experience in America and Bright Promise, Failed Community: Catholics and the American Public Order and a co-editor of the Encyclopedia of Catholic Social Thought, Social Science, and Social Policy. Co-founder of the Society of Catholic Social Scientists with Stephen M. Krason, he is a member of the board of directors of the Fellowship of Catholic Scholars and the advisory board of the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights.

Michael Wenisch holds a Ph.D. in philosophy from the Catholic University of America, as well as a B.S. degree in electrical engineering from the University of Rhode Island. He has held academic positions at Georgetown University, Loyola University in Baltimore, Barry University in Miami, and Morgan State University in Baltimore. Dr. Wenisch has published on Kant and early modern philosophical thought, as well as in the area of early phenomenology. Since 2004, he has also taken great interest in the peaking of world oil production rates and the economic, social, political, and philosophical implications of this historic transition.