

About the Authors

Peter D. Beaulieu holds a bachelor of architecture degree (1967) and an interdisciplinary doctorate in urban and regional planning in multicultural settings (1975), both from the University of Washington. He served as an officer in the United States Navy and took part in the Pacific recoveries of the Apollo XI and XII lunar landing spacecraft (1969). He is a founding member of the G. K. Chesterton Society of Seattle and a past member of the Pastoral Council of the Archdiocese of Seattle. His recent book is Beyond Secularism and Jihad? (Rowman and Littlefield/University Press of America, 2012).

Steven J. Brust holds an M.A. in philosophy from Franciscan University of Steubenville, and an M.A. and Ph.D. in political theory from The Catholic University of America. His research and teaching interests include the history of Western political thought, Catholic political thought, Catholic social teaching, natural law and natural rights, law and morality, and American government. He has taught at Seattle Pacific University, Catholic University of America, Georgetown University, and Lock Haven University, and is currently an assistant professor at Eastern New Mexico University.

Jeffrey S. Burwell, S.J., is the director of the Catholic Studies program at the University of Manitoba and teaches regularly in the Faculty of Education. He was ordained to the priesthood in June 2009 and received a doctorate in Educational Administration in October 2012. He speaks and writes often about topics connected to Catholic studies, the Jesuits, and education. He travels annually to Israel with students to explore with them the foundations of the Catholic Church in the region. Aside from academic pursuits, he is the parochial vicar of a small parish in Winnipeg, Canada, a private pilot, and a woefully unsuccessful weekend fisherman.

Gary D. Glenn is Distinguished Teaching Professor Emeritus of Political Science at Northern Illinois University where he has taught since 1966. He is a student of the history of political philosophy, American political thought, and of the relation of religion to both. He has paid particular attention throughout his career to Xenophon, Hobbes, Locke, and the American Founding. In recent years, his scholarship has focused primarily on the relation of Catholicism to American democracy.

Mark W. Gonnella holds a master's in theology from the Aquinas Institute of Theology in St. Louis. He teaches theology at a college preparatory school in New Orleans. His interest is primarily moral theology, particularly Thomistic natural law and virtue ethics.

David A. Gilbert received his Ph.D. in Latin American history from the University of Iowa in 2003. He is currently associate professor of history at Clayton State University in Morrow, Georgia.

Kenneth L. Grasso is professor of political science at Texas State University-San Marcos. He has written widely on Catholic social thought and has edited several books including Catholicism and Religious Freedom: Contemporary Reflections on Vatican II's Declaration on Religious Liberty (Sheed & Ward, 2006); Rethinking Rights: Historical, Political, and Philosophical Perspectives (University of Missouri Press, 2009); and Theology and Public Philosophy: Four Conversations (Lexington, 2012).

John Hart, DC, MHSc, is a chiropractor in Greenville, South Carolina.

L. Joseph Hebert is professor of political science and leadership studies and director of pre-law studies at St. Ambrose University in Davenport, Iowa. He is the author of More than Kings and Less Than Men: Tocqueville on the Promise and Perils of Democratic Individualism (2010) and co-editor of Alexis de Tocqueville and the Art of Democratic Statesmanship (2011). Beginning with the 2015 issue, he will be editor in chief of the The Catholic Social Science Review.

Brian Jones is a Ph.D. candidate in philosophy at the University of St. Thomas in Houston, Texas, and holds an M.A. in theology from Franciscan University of Steubenville. From 2009 to 2011, he taught seventh-grade science at Entrepreneurship Preparatory School in Cleveland, Ohio. His work has been published in New Blackfriars, Crisis, Catholic World Report, Homiletic and Pastoral Review, and Social Justice Review. His essay, "The Professor Who Knows Our Names," is forthcoming in a book of collected essays in honor of Fr. James Schall, S.J., titled Schall at Georgetown.

David M. Klocek is a consultant on higher education issues. He was a professor and assistant dean at the Institute of World Politics in Washington from 2005 until 2012; a political science professor at Madonna University in Livonia, Michigan, from 2003 until 2005; and a professor and social science department chair at St. Mary's College in Orchard Lake, Michigan, from 2000 until 2003.

Stephen M. Krason is professor of political science and legal studies at Franciscan University of Steubenville and co-founder and president of the Society of Catholic Social Scientists.

Daniel J. Mahoney holds the Augustine Chair in Distinguished Scholarship at Assumption College in Worcester, Massachusetts. He received his Ph.D. in political science from Catholic University of America (1988) and is the author or editor of thirteen books, including treatments of the thought of Raymond Aron, Charles de Gaulle, Bertrand de Jouvenel, and Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn. His most recent book is The Other Solzhenitsyn: Telling the Truth About a Misunderstood Writer and Thinker (St. Augustine's Press, 2014).

Michael G. Moore is an associate at the United Kingdom-based performance consultancy BigBlueStuff, where he specializes in conflict resolution. Informed by the work of George Kelly and neuro-linguistic programming, he coined the term integrity psychology, an approach to personal and corporate development through which clients are helped to remove conflicting parts within themselves and also in relationships with others. Applying these principles to his own career in the late 1980s, Michael separated his income from his profession to eliminate any perception of a conflict of interest. He has published in The Tablet and the Catholic Medical Quarterly.

The Most Reverend William Francis Murphy has been bishop of the diocese of Rockville Centre, New York, since 2001. He was educated at Boston Latin School for Harvard College, the North American College, and the Gregorian University (S.T.L., 1965; S.T.D., 1974). Ordained a priest in 1964, he served as under-secretary of the Pontifical Commission for Justice and Peace from 1979 to 1987. He has written a regular column for diocesan newspapers and published several articles in the fields of Catholic social thought, communications, and ecumenism. Ordained to the episcopate in 1995, he serves on a number of USCCB committees, is a Member of the Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue, and is a consultant to the Pontifical Commission for Religious Relations with Jews.

Edward J. O'Boyle is senior research associate with Mayo Research Institute, specializing in personalist economics that focuses on economic agency in which homo economicus and the individualism of orthodox economics are replaced by the acting person and personalism. He has published in Monthly Labor Review, Journal of Markets & Morality, International Journal of Social Economics, Review of Social Economy, Catholic Social Science Review, Journal of Business Ethics, Logos, and others. He is a past president of the Association for Social Economics and recipient of the Thomas Divine Award for lifetime contributions to social economics and the social economy.

Brian Scarnecchia, M.Div., J.D., is an associate professor of law at Ave Maria School of Law in Naples, Florida, and an associate professor in the Legal Studies program and the Human Life Studies program at Franciscan University of Steubenville. He is the founding president of International Solidarity and Human Rights Institute (ISHRI), a non-governmental organization (NGO) in consultative status with the United Nations. He is the author of Bioethics, Law and Human Life Issues (Scarecrow Press, 2010) and co-author of The Millennium Development Goals in Light of Catholic Social Teaching (C-Fam, 2009), and has published numerous scholarly and popular articles. He is a founding member and an expert on family and social issues for the Catholic Inspired NGO Forum, working in association with the Pontifical Council for the Family and Secretariat of the Holy See.

Gary J. Scott is professor and chair of the Department of Business and Economics at Belmont Abbey College in Charlotte, North Carolina. He has previously served as senior research fellow at the Intercollegiate Studies Institute, graduate program director of economics at St. Mary's University in San Antonio, and vice president of the San Antonio Business and Economics Society. He holds a Ph.D. in economics from the University of Notre Dame (1993). Most of his research has focused on formal education, and his work has been covered by outlets such as the Chronicle of Higher Education, C-Span's Washington Journal, the Acton Institute, Wisconsin Public Radio, Aleteia, the Washington Times, the Texas Public Policy Foundation, and the Cornell Daily Sun.

Adam Seagrave received his B.A. from Thomas Aquinas College in California and his Ph.D. from the University of Notre Dame in political philosophy. He has taught at Pepperdine University as a visiting assistant professor and at Notre Dame as a postdoctoral fellow before beginning his current position as Assistant Professor of Political Theory at Northern Illinois University. He teaches and writes in the areas of intellectual history, political philosophy, and American political thought. He is the managing editor of American Political Thought: A Journal of Ideas, Institutions and Culture, and author of The Foundations of Natural Morality: On the Compatibility of Natural Rights and the Natural Law (University of Chicago Press, 2014).

Joseph A. Varacalli is S.U.N.Y. Distinguished Service Professor and Director of the Center for Catholic Studies at Nassau Community College. Co-founder (with Stephen M. Krason) of the Society of Catholic Social Scientists, he is the author of The Catholic Experience in America and Bright Promise, Failed Community: Catholics and the American Public Order. He is also a co-editor of volumes I, II, and III of the Encyclopedia of Catholic Social Thought, Social Science, and Social Policy.