

Authors

Jenna Tomasello is a McNair Scholar at SUNY Buffalo with a major in Philosophy and a minor in Legal Studies. Her philosophical interests include applied ethics, philosophy of law, philosophy of education, and feminist philosophy. She will begin graduate study in Higher Education Administration in fall 2013.

Max H. Siegel is a junior in the philosophy department at Princeton University. He is also pursuing certificates in linguistics and human values. His primary philosophical interests are metaethics, philosophy of action, and philosophy of language. Max aspires to pursue an academic career as a philosopher.

Kyle Curran is a fourth year student at Trent University, Canada majoring in History with a minor in Philosophy. His primary philosophical interests lie in ethics, political philosophy, metaphysics, and philosophy & literature. This year Kyle presented at the Trent Philosophy Student Symposium and helped lead the Writing Insight Team, a group dedicated to helping students write philosophical papers.

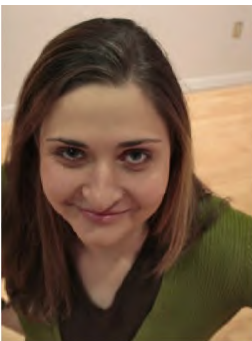

Jenny Carmichael is a junior at Michigan State University in East Lansing. Her primary major is Philosophy; her other major is Engineering. Her philosophical interests include metaphysics and history of philosophy.

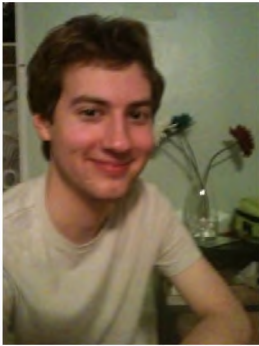

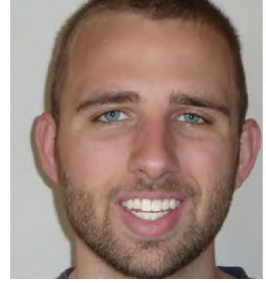

Mark McGinn is a senior Philosophy major and Creative Writing minor at Webster University in St. Louis, Missouri. His philosophical interests include phenomenology, existentialism, pragmatism, critical theory, and the philosophy of art.

Vesak Chi is a senior Philosophy major at the University of Washington in Seattle. His philosophical interests include, but are not limited to: ethics, epistemology, and metaphysics. He is of Cambodian descent, and his name 'Vesak' represents the Buddhist holiday sometimes referred to as the Thrice Blessed Day.

Kristen Wells studies at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. She majors in German, Philosophy, and Religion and minors in History and Music. Her philosophical interests are in continental ethics, especially Nietzsche. Before entering graduate school for philosophy, she is studying in Tübingen, Germany in spring 2013.

Chad Marxen is a junior Philosophy major and Math minor at Pepperdine University in Malibu, CA. His main areas of interest in philosophy are metaphysics, metaethics, epistemology, and philosophy of language. He enjoys reading, basketball, and playing the piano in his spare time.

A Baltimore native, John C. Hill is a current senior studying Philosophy at Gettysburg College. His research interests in Philosophy include philosophy of language and logic (especially formal semantics and pragmatics), philosophy of mind, and epistemology. He also enjoys dancing, cooking, and reading things other than Philosophy.

Oda Storbråten Davanger is currently a senior pursuing her B.A. in Philosophy and minoring in Politics at Earlham College in Richmond, Indiana. She grew up in Norway and studied at the United World College of Hong Kong. Post-structuralism, political philosophy, and feminist philosophy are among her wide array of philosophical interests.

